A New Understanding of Journalism within the Framework of Computational Thinking and Data Journalism

Alaattin ASLAN<sup>2</sup>

Abstract

The developments in science and technology, the widespread use of computers and virtual networks, and the rapid transfer of data with digitization have led to the reconsideration of journalism with different dimensions. Concepts such as open data, which is freely accessible in the digital world, and big data, which is non-structured but variable in the volume, variety, velocity and veracity of data, have influenced journalists to create news stories. Data sets are handled in the data flow that is renewed every second in the huge data pool. Data journalism, which is a journalism approach in which data is analyzed and stories are extracted from it, has played a critical role in catching journalists' compatibility with the digital age. A modern understanding of journalism has emerged in which readers are informed by numbers, computational thinking is visualized by quantitative facts, and abstract reasoning is used to create a story. In this context, with the descriptive content analysis method in the study, how the leaks of Wikileaks, Swissleaks, Football Leaks, LuxLeaks, Panama Papers, Pandora Papers, which occupied the agenda for a long time, were handled in terms of journalism and especially data journalism. Topics such as how the visualization of the data changes the story are also discussed. In addition, the subject of data visualization reporting has been emphasized, based on the change in the business focus of journalists.
